Extract from the "Musical Times,"

1st June, 1891.

AMONGST the many College Concerts given in Oxford during the present term, that by the Eglesfield Musical Society, at Queen's College, on the 22nd ult., is deserving of special notice. This Society is one of the most enterprising in the University in the encouragement given to new works, and on this occasion a Ballad for men's voices and full orchestra entitled "Horatius" was performed. The composer, the Rev. J. H. Mee, conducted his work, which he had specially written for and dedicated to the society. The words are selected from the poem by Lord Macaulay, and are admirably suited for musical treatment. The composer divides his composition into five numbers: (1) "The Etruscan Muster," (2) "The Panic at Rome," (3) "The Captain of the Gate," (4) "The Keeping of the Bridge," and (5) the Epilogue. Each of these numbers has its special "point" and dramatic interest at the hands of the composer. It is really refreshing to find that (although restricted to men's voices) Dr. Mee has something new to say, and knows how to say it. The vocal parts throughout are well adapted for voices, and, consequently, effect is obtained by an easy and natural process. The instrumental parts, too, are by no means difficult, yet they give great dramatic colour to the work. The performance was one of great merit. It is impossible in a short notice like this to do more than single out a few places which seem to be of greatest interest. The opening number ("The Etruscan Muster") at once commends the attention of the musician, by the martial character of the first theme, led off by the strings in unison, and soon to be strengthened by the soft wind. The voices then take up the motive, firstly without accompaniment, and secondly with the addition of the orchestra, until a striking effect is obtained by the sustained harmony of the trombones and horns. Indeed, the entire number is rich in musical contrasts. In the second part ("The Panic at Rome") occurs a very effective melody with the full orchestra, where Horatius comes forward and declares his readiness to assist in defending "The Bridge" against the advance of the Tuscan army. This is followed by a pleasing melody for the tenor, in which at the words "And for the tender mother" is a beautiful accompaniment by the strings and horns, with an oboe obbligato. This second part concludes with a striking phrase for the full orchestra and voices, where Horatius and the two other volunteers set out in order to "keep the bridge." This phrase is evidently a favourite with the composer, for he reintroduces it in the last number (the Epilogue) no less than four times, and with it winds up his composition. Space forbids to enlarge on the remaining numbers further than to state that they are exceedingly vocal and effectively instrumented. There is no doubt that the work is a valuable addition to music for male voices. At the conclusion of the performance the composer was received with the greatest enthusiasm.

Cantata—"Thoratus"

Presented to the Society by JOHN EGGLESTON, ESQ., Member of R.M.L.

FIRST TIME IN AUSTRALIA

Liedertafel and Orchestra

NO. I.—THE ETRUSCAN MUSTER.

LARS PORSENA of Clusium

By the Nine Gods he swore,
That the great house of Tarquin
Should suffer wrong no more.
By the Nine Gods he swore it,
And named a trysting day,
And bade his messengers ride forth,
East and west and south and north,
To summon his array.

East and west and south and north
The messengers ride fast,
And tower and town and cottage
Have heard the trumpet's blast.
Shame on the false Etruscan
Who lingers in his home,
When Porsena of Clusium
Is on the march for Rome.

The horsemen and the footmen
Are pouring in amain
From many a stately market-place;
From many a fruitful plain
From many a lonely hamlet,
Which, hid by beech and pine,
Like an eagle's nest, hangs on the crest
Of purple Apennine.

There be thirty chosen prophets,
 The wisest of the land,
 Who alway by Lars Porsena
 Both morn and evening stand:
 Evening and morn the Thirty
 Have turned the verses o'er,
 Traced from the right on linen white
 By mighty seers of yore.

And with one voice the Thirty
 Have their glad answer given:
 "Go forth, go forth, Lars Porsena;
 Go forth, beloved of Heaven;
 Go, and return in glory
 To Clusium's royal dome;
 And hang round Nurscia's altars
 The golden shields of Rome."

And now hath every city
 Sent up her tale of men;
 The foot are fourscore thousand,
 The horse are thousands ten:
 Before the gates of Sutrium
 Is met the great array.
 A proud man was Lars Porsena
 Upon the trysting day.

NO. 2.—THE PANIC AT ROME.

But by the yellow Tiber
 Was tumult and affright:
 From all the spacious champaign
 To Rome men took their flight.
 A mile around the city,
 The throng stopped up the ways;
 A fearful sight it was to see
 Through two long nights and days.
 For aged folks on crutches,
 And women great with child,
 And mothers sobbing over babes
 That clung to them and smiled.
 And sick men borne on litters
 High on the necks of slaves,
 And troops of sun-burned husbandmen
 With reaping-hooks and staves,
 And droves of mules and asses
 Laden with skins of wine,
 And endless flocks of goats and sheep,
 And endless herds of kine,

And endless trains of waggons
 That creaked beneath the weight
 Of corn-sacks and of household goods,
 Choked every roaring gate.

The Fathers of the City,
 They sat all night and day,
 For every hour some horseman came
 With tidings of dismay.
 Out spake the Consul roundly:
 "The bridge must straight go down;
 For, since Janiculum is lost,
 Nought else can save the town."

Just then a scout came flying,
 All wild with haste and fear;
 "To arms! to arms! Sir Consul:
 Lars Porsena is here."

On the low hills to westward
 The Consul fixed his eye,
 And saw the swarthy storm of dust
 Rise fast along the sky.

And nearer fast and nearer
 Doth the red whirlwind come;
 And louder still and still more loud,
 From underneath that rolling cloud,
 Is heard the trumpet's war-note proud,
 The trampling and the hum.
 And plainly and more plainly
 Now through the gloom appears,
 Far to left and far to right,
 In broken gleams of dark-blue light,
 The long array of helmets bright,
 The long array of spears.

No. 3.—THE CAPTAIN OF THE GATE.

But the Consul's brow was sad,
 And the Consul's speech was low,
 And darkly looked he at the wall,
 And darkly at the foe.

"Their van will be upon us
 Before the bridge goes down;
 And if they once may win the bridge,
 What hope to save the town?"

Then out spake brave Horatius,
 The Captain of the Gate:
 "To every man upon this earth
 Death cometh soon or late.

And how can man die better
 Than facing fearful odds,
 For the ashes of his fathers,
 And the temples of his gods,

"And for the tender mother
 Who dandled him to rest,
 And for the wife who nurses
 His baby at her breast,
 And for the holy maidens
 Who feed the eternal flame,
 To save them from false Sextus
 That wrought the deed of shame?"

"Hew down the bridge, Sir Consul,
 With all the speed ye may;
 I, with two more to help me,
 Will hold the foe in play.
 In yon straight path a thousand
 May well be stopped by three.
 Now who will stand on either hand,
 And keep the bridge with me?"

Then out spoke Spurius Lartius;
 A Ramnian proud was he:
 "Lo, I will stand at thy right hand,
 And keep the bridge with thee."
 And out spake strong Herminius;
 Of Titian blood was he:
 "I will abide on thy left side
 And keep the bridge with thee."

"Horatius," quoth the Consul,
 "As thou sayest, so let it be,"
 And straight against that great array
 Forth went the dauntless Three.
 For Romans in Rome's quarrel
 Spared neither land nor gold,
 Nor son nor wife, nor limb nor life,
 In the brave days of old.

NO. 4.—THE KEEPING OF THE BRIDGE.

Meanwhile the Tuscan army,
 Right glorious to behold,
 Came flashing back the noonday light,
 Rank behind rank like surges bright
 Of a broad sea of gold.

Four hundred trumpets sounded
 A peal of warlike glee,
 As that great host, with measured tread,
 And spears advanced, and ensigns spread,
 Rolled slowly towards the bridge's head,
 Where stood the dauntless Three.

And forth three chiefs came spurring
 Before that deep array;
 To earth they sprang, their swords they drew,
 And lifted high their shields, and flew
 To win the narrow way.

Stout Lartius hurled down Aunus
 Into the stream beneath:
 Herminius struck at Seius,
 And clove him to the teeth:
 At Picus brave Horatius
 Darted one fiery thrust;
 And the proud Umbrian's gilded arms
 Clashed in the bloody dust.

Then Ocnus of Falerii
 Rushed on the Roman Three;
 And Lausulus of Urge
 The rover of the sea;
 And Aruns of Volsinium,
 Who slew the great wild boar,
 The great wild boar that had his den
 Amidst the reeds of Cosa's fen,
 And wasted fields, and slaughtered men,
 Along Albinia's shore.

Herminius smote down Aruns:
 Lartius laid Ocnus low:
 Right to the heart of Lausulus
 Horatius sent a blow.
 "Lie there," he cried, "fell pirate!
 No more, aghast and pale,
 From Ostia's walls the crowd shall mark
 The track of thy destroying bark,
 Thy thrice accursed sail."

But now no sound of laughter
 Was heard among the foes,
 A wild and wrathful clamour
 From all the vanguard rose.
 There lacked not men of prowess,
 Nor men of lordly race;
 For all Etruria's noblest
 Were round the fatal place.

But all Etruria's noblest
 Felt their hearts sink to see
 On the earth the bloody corpses,
 In the path the dauntless Three.

But meanwhile axe and lever
 Have manfully been plied;
 And now the bridge hangs tottering
 Above the boiling tide.
 "Come back, come back, Horatius!"
 Loud cried the Fathers all.
 "Back, Lartius! back, Herminius!
 Back, ere the ruin fall!"

Back darted Spurius Lartius;
 Herminius darted back:
 And, as they passed, beneath their feet
 They felt the timbers crack.
 But when they turned their faces,
 And on the farther shore
 Saw brave Horatius stand alone,
 They would have crossed once more.

But with a crash like thunder
 Fell every loosened beam,
 And, like a dam, the mighty wreck
 Lay right athwart the stream.
 And a long shout of triumph
 Rose from the walls of Rome,
 As to the highest turret-tops
 Was splashed the yellow foam.
 Alone stood brave Horatius,
 But constant still in mind;
 Thrice thirty thousand foes before,
 And the broad flood behind.

"Down with him!" cried false Sextus
 With a smile on his pale face.
 "Now yield thee," cried Lars Porsena,
 "Now yield thee to our grace."

Round turned he, as not deigning
 Those craven ranks to see;
 Nought spake he to Lars Porsena,
 To Sextus nought spake he;
 But he saw on Palatinus
 The white porch of his home;
 And he spake to the noble river
 That rolls by the towers of Rome.

"Oh, Tiber! Father Tiber!
 To whom the Romans pray,
 A Roman's life, a Roman's arms,
 Take thou in charge this day!"
 So he spake, and speaking sheathed
 The good sword by his side,
 And with his harness on his back,
 Plunged headlong in the tide.

No sound of joy or sorrow
 Was heard from either bank;
 But friends and foes in dumb surprise,
 With parted lips and straining eyes,
 Stood gazing where he sank:
 And when above the surges
 They saw his crest appear,
 All Rome sent forth a rapturous cry,
 And even the ranks of Tuscany
 Could scarce forbear to cheer.

But fiercely ran the current,
 Swollen high by months of rain:
 And fast his blood was flowing;
 And he was sore in pain,
 And heavy with his armour,
 And spent with changing blows:
 And oft they thought him sinking,
 But still again he rose.

Never, I ween, did swimmer,
 In such an evil case,
 Struggle through such a raging flood
 Safe to the landing-place.
 But his limbs were borne up bravely
 By the brave heart within,
 And our good father Tiber
 Bore bravely up his chin.

And now he feels the bottom;
 Now on dry earth he stands;
 Now round him throng the Fathers
 To press his gory hands;
 And now, with shouts and clapping,
 And noise of weeping loud,
 He enters through the River-Gate,
 Borne by the joyous crowd.

NO. 5.—EPILOGUE.

They gave him of the corn-land,
 That was of public right,
 As much as two strong oxen
 Could plough from morn till night;

And they made a molten image,
 And set it up on high,
 And there it stands unto this day
 To witness if I lie.

It stands in the Comitium,
 Plain for all folks to see;
 Horatius in his harness,
 Halting upon one knee:
 And underneath is written,
 In letters all of gold,
 How valiantly he kept the bridge
 In the brave days of old.

And still his name sounds stirring
 Unto the men of Rome,
 As the trumpet-blast that cries to them
 To charge the Volscian home;
 And wives still pray to Juno
 For boys with hearts as bold
 As his who kept the bridge so well
 In the brave days of old.

And in the nights of winter,
 When the cold north winds blow,
 And the long howling of the wolves
 Is heard amidst the snow;
 When round the lonely cottage
 Roars loud the tempest's din,
 And the good logs of Algidus
 Roar louder yet within;

When the oldest cask is opened,
 And the largest lamp is lit;
 When the chestnuts glow in the embers,
 And the kid turns on the spit;
 When young and old in circle
 Around the firebrands close;
 When the girls are weaving baskets,
 And the lads are shaping bows;

When the goodman mends his armour,
 And trims his helmet's plume;
 When the goodwife's shuttle merrily
 Goes flashing through the loom;
 With weeping and with laughter
 Still is the story told,
 How well Horatius kept the bridge
 In the brave days of old.

INTERVAL OF FIVE MINUTES.

PART II

Part Song—"The Better Land" J. Kendall

(COMPOSED FOR THE SOCIETY)

Liedertafel

I HEAR thee speak of the Better Land,
Thou call'st its children a happy band;
Mother, where is that radiant shore?
Shall we not seek it and weep no more?
Is it where the flow'r of the orange blows,
And the fireflies dance thro' the myrtle boughs?
Not there, not there, my child

Is it far away in some region old,
Where the rivers wander o'er sands of gold,
Where the burning rays of the ruby shine
And the diamond lights up the secret mine,
And the pearl gleams forth from the coral strand?
Is it there, sweet mother, that better land?
Not there, not there, my child.

Eye hath not seen it, my gentle boy;
Ear hath not heard its sweet songs of joy;
Dreams cannot picture a world so fair;
Sorrow and death may not enter there;
Time doth not breath on its fadeless bloom;
Far beyond the clouds, beyond the tomb,
It is there, my child, it is there.

Liedertafel

- (a) Tho' long years have passed away,
 And joyous summer left me;
 Tho' autumn sings her plaintive lay,
 Yet art thou still dear to me.

Tho' far away, thy voice is ever near to me;
 Absence but makes thee dearer to me;
 No time can change my love for thee.

- (b) MINE host, fill up!
 What joy to drink of rosy wine!
 Fill the glass; drink it up!
 Fill the goblet to the brim.
 Drink it off! Drink it off!
 By the clink of glass,
 By song and glee,
Toujours fidèle.

When I kiss the foaming goblet,
 Dearest love, I think of thee.
 When the landlord seeks his reckoning,
 Then I drink; love, to thee.

Mine host, this goblet fill with wine!

[SPOKEN—One! two! three!] Hurrah!

Sweetheart, dearest sweetheart,
 Dearest love, I think of thee;
 Dearest love, I daily pledge thee
 In the cup filled to thee.
 Drink it up! My glass is gone!
 Mine host, fill up!

What joy to drink of rosy wine!
 Boys, take another glass of wine,
 That drives all sorrow from the heart of man.
 Now drain the goblet! Quick the goblet drain!

[SPOKEN—One! two! three!] Hurrah!

Liedertafel and Orchestra

HALLO! Hallo!
Now hunters come away, for early breaks the day;
With rifles prov'd and tried we range the mountain side;
Keep distance every man, each nook and covert scan,
From by the forest end to where the two ways blend.

Yoho, yoho, yoho! There something crouches low;
What eyes can shine like that? It is a mountain cat.
'Tis only so I fear: It is a crouching deer;
Surround it every way, before it steals away.

See now he springs and flies, and for the forest tries,
But there the hunters stand, with steady eye and hand.
And crack it goes, yoho! the ball has laid him low;
A noble beast is he, and killed most manfully.

Here from the waterfall we send a hunter's call,
To glad the list'ning ear of wives and sweethearts dear,
So gently timid they, that if we shoot they say—
"Ah me! there's someone hurt to day."

O sweethearts in the vale, you from afar we hail,
 With joyful notes that tell that all with us is well,
 Yet here awhile we roam; and with the evening come
 To seek our dear and quiet home.

Tra la, la la, la la! then here's hurrah, hurrah!
 For such a bonny land, for vales and mountains grand.
 And here's hurrah, hurrah! for wives and maidens true.
 Sweethearts, we shout for you, hurrah!

An eye that never fails, a heart that never quails,
 A cheek aglow with health, is more than idle wealth.
 Hallo! hallo! hallo! a-hunting we will go:
 By topmost crag and peak our timid prey we seek.
 Hallo! hallo! hallo! a-hunting we will go:
 Full quickly flies the day: Hallo, hallo, away!
