To Color Grey Hair, Use

EVE'S SHADEINE

Made in Four Colors: Light Brown,
Brown, Dark Brown, Black.—1 Liquid.

Shadeine is a new and important chemical discovery, which regenerates and develops the original color of grey and faded hair, at the same time tinting it a perfectly natural color. It is composed of such ingredients that it cannot cause the objectionable hues produced by most of the present dyes, and is permanent and washable when once the desired color is obtained. It contains neither lead, silver, mercury, sulphur, nor any objectionable stain. It has no smell, does not burn, neither does it make the hair sticky or greasy, and leaves fluffy and curly hair unchanged. Shadeine encourages the growth, and keeps the scalp in a healthy state.

It is sold in four different colors as above, therefore it can be obtained to suit the natural color of the hair of all purchasers. Shadeine is sent secretly packed, and free from label on the bottle, so that it can be left about without causing notice.

In ordering, state color required or send lock of hair.

Ladies are advised that Mr. Eve and staff of fully qualified hair colorers are daily in attendance, and give special attention to this difficult branch of hair dressing, and offer advice gratis.

Mr. Eve may be consulted free of charge, on all matters relating to premature greyness, loss of hair, bald patches.

A leading doctor says: "That wonderful coloring for the hair which by one application removes all traces of the finger marks of time and worry—otherwise grey hair, called "Shadeine." Price, 5/6. Posted throughout the States, 6/-

THE LIEDERTAFEL.

POUR the libation in fizzing champagne,
Leaping in silvery, swirling cascades ;
Pour the libation in fizzing champagne,
Gushing in tremulous, prancing, proud courses,
Flowing in boiling and high foaming ardours,
Like to the olden-time streamlets and sources
Deeply in Ida's dun thickets concealed.

Mould there thy pearl drops from silvery foam ;
Seething they climb from their specular home.
Mould there thy pearl drops from silvery foam.
There are the sharp infundibular goblets,
Sparkling and glistening like bubbling fountains,
Pour'd from the mouth of the broken sealed magnum
Deeply in Ida's dun thickets concealed.

Swaying and thinking in aureate room,
Clink now the glasses with resonant swing ;
Rolling and swe ling like zephyrs in spring-time,
Dance frolicsome genil of champagne ;
Backward and forward enlacing departing,
Glistening, vanishing, lost in the crystal vase ;
Brief as the day of youth's gay effervescence.

THE LIEDERTAFEL.

IF thou art sleeping maiden,
Awake, awake and open thy door,

But come with thy naked feet,
We shall have to pass through the dewy grass
And the waters wide and fleet.

THE LIEDERTAFEL.

THE Nation's glory into your hands is now given.
Oh, guard it well.
To sink with you, or with you rise to heaven.
The magic spell of heart and song
Links all the worlds that roll along,
So may they ever blended be in richest harmony.
Her voice is like the dreadful thunder,
Terrible in its mighty anger,
It rises on victorious pinions, and vengeance
takes on foes and minions—
Strikes terror to the tyrant's heart,
If truth to exile e'er be driven.
Then to her aid the Muse arisen
Shall find revenge in lofty tuneful song.
Oh, freeborn sons of art arise!
Lift up your head to beauty's throne,
And as with her you mount the skies,
All lesser crowns disown.
The thousand various ways unending
Of rich humanity explore,
Till from the summit's height extending,
Behold the vast eternal shore.

"Thou art my dream"

Carl Hofmann

THE LIEDERTAFEL.

THE drooping flowers their buds are closing.
The silver stars keep watch above!
The world in tranquil sleep reposing
My wakeful bosom yields to love.
While here in hopeless grief I languish,
Could I behold thy vision bright,
Then would I fondly breathe my anguish,
Thou art my dream thro' stilly night.

Tho' all unmoved by love's appealing,
No kindling passion lights thy brow?
No voice of love thy heart revealing,
Still all the world to me art thou.
Bend softly down, ye golden tresses,
Beam kindly once, bright orbs of light;
List, lady, list to love's distresses—
Thou art my dream thro' stilly night.

(Cornet Solo—Mr. ARTHUR HAIGH).

THE LIEDERTAFEL.

THRO' forest deep at dead of night,
The mail is slowly borne;
While sleep the weary travellers,
The post-boy winds his horn.

The forest-ranger's dwelling
Within the wood is seen,
The horn a tale is telling—
What can its echoes mean?

Its tunes so soft and sweetly flow,
The winds, in passing by,
Pause at the open window,
And mingling with them fly.

Where sleeps the forest maiden,
While beams the moon above;
With love her dreams are laden—
With melody and love.

Aria—

"Elsa's Dream"

Bruch

THE LIEDERTAFEL.

ON land we find but scanty honour,
A vagrant folk without a home;
Exiles to-day on shore we wonder,
To-morrow monarchs of the foam!
Clink again!
Glasses drain!
Drink amain!

Our coats are good broad-cloth from England,
And heavy silk from Genoa;
Our scores we reckon with the grapple,
And we receipt them with "Hurrah!"
Clink again!
Glasses drain!
Drink amain!

When o'er the deep our sails are flying,
All things must bow to our control;
On every land a tax we levy
And ocean's pride must pay us toll.
Clink again!
Glasses drain!
Drink amain!

Here's glorious beer! That comes from Hamburg!
Or is your taste for Spanish wine?
All climes are pledged to feed and clothe us,
All fill the cup when we would dine.
Clink again!
Glasses drain!
Drink amain!

Gay go the hours with wine and singing,
A merry life beyond compare!
And when at last our skulls lay bleaching,
Why there's an end to further care.
Clink again!
Glasses drain!
Drink amain!
