CONCERT OVERTURE—

The Ship o' the Fiend

Hamish MacCunn.

(The Score and Parts kindly lent by Mr. Charles Levy.)

ORCHESTRA.

"O WHERE hae ye been, my long lost lover,
This seven lang years and mair?"

"O I'm come again to seek your love,
An' the vows that ye did swear."

"Now haud your tongue o' my love and vows,
For they can breed but strife ;

Now haud your tongue o' my former vows,
For I am anither man's wife."

"O fause are the vows o' womankind,
But fair is their fause bodie ;

I wad never hae trodden on Irish ground,
Were it no for the love o' thee."

"Ye may leave your husband to himsel',
And your little son also,
And sail wi' me across the sea,
Sae fair the wind doth blow."

"See ye not seven pretty ships,
The eighth brought me to land,
With merch

And my

"O weel I like the ship," she said,
"And weel I like the sea,
But where are a' your mariners?
I see nane but thee and me."

They hadna sailed a league, a league,
A league, but barely three,
When eerie grew the lift above,
And gurly grew the sea.

She hadna sailed a league, a league,
A league, but barely three,
When she espied the cloven hoof,
And wept right bitterlie.

"O what are yon, yon pleasant hills,
That the sun shines sweetly on?"
"O yon are the hills of heaven," he said
"Where you will never win."

"O whatna mountain is yon," she said,
"Sae dreary wi' frost and snow?"
"O yon is the mountain o' hell," he cried,
"Where you and I maun go."

The clouds grew black, and the wind grew loud,
And the levin filled her e'e;
And waesome wailed the snow-white sprites,
Out o'er the roaring sea.

He struck the mainmast wi' his hand,
The foremast wi' his knee;
He split the gallant ship in twain,
And sank her in the sea.

ARIA—In Questa Tomba Oscura

Beethoven.

MISS ADELAIDE BRUCE.

—Landerhemnung Ed. Greig.

And it was Olav Trygvason,
Found he ne'er a spot to land,
E'en like the waves the royal desire,
Shattered upon the strand.
"See!" cried the bard unleaping,
"Yonder snow-covered peaks o'er cloud bands peeping."

And it was Olav Trygvason,
Suddenly he seemed to sight
Towering temples, domes and spires,
Glist'ning in virgin white.
Then vowed the king undaunted,
With his followers to tread that land enchanted,
Onward he went; the rushing streams
Heralded the coming spring,
Swayed in the stormy wind the forest strangely was murmuring,
Sounds as of church bells chiming,
And then spake the king,
Spake as tho' dreaming:
"Here the spot to found our kingdom!
Hell! these temple walls defy thee!
Hearts are swelling, souls are yearning,
God, to thee alone be glory.

"Be my faith as yonder mountains,
Root as deeply, shine as purely;
And as these my faith strive upwards,
On to him, the All Creator,"
Olav's prayer be ours to utter,
As we near the throne of mercy.
Hearts are swelling, souls are yearning,
God, to thee alone be glory
On to God! On to God!

CHORAL ODE—

From Goethe's "Helen"

(Faust, Part 2, Act 3.)

G. W. L. Marshall-Hall.

(Composed specially for and dedicated to the Melbourne Liedertafel.)

ALTO SOLO—MISS ADELAIDE BRUCE.

Life presented itself to the Greek mind as a series of manifestations of Power. Omnipotent, irresistible, irrevocable, first in the order of forces, doomed Fate, then the gods, the ancestral heroes, and the pre-eminent men of the times. Each State, surrounded by enemies, depended for its safety on the courage and power of its citizens, whom a reverse of war would convert into slaves with their wives and children. The actual experience of the Power and Tragedy of human existence, which to our modern comfortable plebian semi-vegetable life are almost unintelligible, lent an intensity to the moment which we can but faintly imagine. Power and its limitation were equally displayed in the sudden plunge from the height of prosperity to the depth of woe, and found expression in the never equalled strength and restraint of Greek art, imparting a reverential solemnity even to its most joyous utterances. This is the key note of their art, energetic power, and fate:

*Fate, whose horizons, narrowing from afar
Within their blind abyssal night immerse
Both gods and men, and all things else that be
In irremediable catastrophe.*

In the following ode from Goethe's masterpiece, these qualities are passionately felt by one who was himself a Greek at heart though born in a barbarian age. The music is an endeavour to complete and enforce the poet's intention. The serenity, not untinged with a certain noble sadness, of the first stanza, is contrasted with those following, in which the power and majesty and terrible presence of the gods is imaged, which succeeds the picture of limited fettered humanity.

SCENE: Before the Palace of Menelaus at Sparta.

Andante.

Werfet, O Schwestern, ihr

Though with overlong loitering,
Aber mit desto festerem
Yet with so much the eagerer

Praise the homebringing Lares (Gods).

High as an eagle's flight
Doch wie auf Fittigen
O'er the impassable

Lento.

Wenn umsonst
While in vain
Der Gefangene, sehnsuchtsvoll
The imprisoned one, worn with grief,
Ueber die Zinne des Kerkers hin
Over his dungeon's tall battlements
Armausbreitend sich abhärmt.
Vainly yearning, pines away.

Nach unsäglichen
After unspeakable
Freuden und Qualen,
Gladness and anguish,
Früher Jugendzeit
Youth's first blossom-time
Angefrischt zu gedenken.
Once again to remember.

Share in Helena's hap.

SONG—

Die Lorelei

F. Liszt.

Orchestrated by Professor Marshall-Hall.

MISS MARGUERITE HENDERSON.

I KNOW not what it betokens
That I am so sad at heart,
A legend from bygone ages
Will not from my mind depart.
The air is cool and it darkens,
And calmly flows the Rhine,
The mountain's far summit sparkles
In gentle evening shine.
A lovely lady sitteth
Thereby, entrancing fair,
Her golden raiment glistens,
She combs her golden hair.
She combs it with comb all golden,
And sings a song the while,
That has a soul-betwitching
Resistless melody.
The boatman, as onward he fareth,
It seizeth with anguish dread,
He sees not the rocks fast shoaling,
He looks ever up overhead.
Meseems the wavelets swallow
At last both boatman and boat,
And this with her fatal singing
The Loreley has wrought.

BALLAD—Lord Allin's Daughter

Hamish MacCunn.

THE LIEDERTAFEL, LADIES CHOIR
AND ORCHESTRA.

A CHIEFTAIN to the highlands bound
Cries "Boatman, do not tarry!
And I'll give you a reward
To row

His horsemen hard behind us ride ;
Should they our steps discover,
Then who will cheer my bonny bride,
When they have slain her lover ?
Out spake the hardy highland wight,
" I'll go, my chief, I'm ready !
It is not for your silver bright,
But for your winsome lady.
And by my word, the bonny bird
In danger shall not tarry,
So though the waves are raging white,
I'll row you o'er the ferry."
By this the storm grew loud apace,
The water wraith was shrieking,
And in the scowl of heaven each face
Grew dark as they were speaking.
But still as wilder blew the wind,
And as the night grew drearer,
Adown the glen rode armed men,
Their tramping sounded nearer.
" Oh haste thee, haste ! " the lady cries,
" Though storms around us gather,
I'll meet the raging of the skies,
But not an angry father."
The boat has left the stormy land,
A stormy sea before her,
When, oh, too strong for human hand,
The tempest gather'd o'er her.
And still they rowed amidst the roar
Of waters fast prevailing :
Lord Ullin reached the fatal shore,
His wrath was changed to wailing.
For sore dismayed, thro' storm and shade,
He did his child discover :
One lovely arm she stretched for aid,
And one was round her lover.
" Come back, come back ! " he cried in grief
Across the stormy water,
And I'll forgive your Highland chief,
My daughter ! oh, my daughter !"
And the boatman, trembling, turned the shore,
